THE NEWEST NEW YORK FADS.

Playing Baccarat and Robbing Sweethearts Among Late Social Diversions.
Cor. St. Louis Republic.

I verily believe, that if the Prince of Wales were to steal a sheep, mutton would at once become the most fashionable dish with the Anglomaniacs of Gotham. I am moved to this opinion by the fact that no less than two baccarat clubs have been formed in New York since the beginning of the Gordon Cumming trial in London, and the game promises to become a fad. Why? Simply because through it a Prince of the blood, a notorious gambler and world-famed chronic debtor, has unwillingly advertised his most recent shame. The game itself, which was illustrated to me with a pack of cards by one thoroughly familiar with it, is so silly that devotion to it ought to be a sufficient certificate for admission into any imbecile asylum in the country. "William-a-Trumbletoe," "Club Fiat" or "Mumble-the-Peg" would, it seems to me, afford much more excitement and enjoyment to any sensible company of ladies and gentlemen than baccarat, in which neither physical dexterity nor mental activity is required to the slightest degree. Baccarat will be popular at all the seaside resorts this summer and at half the clubs in town next winter, mark my words.

New York is, I believe, the only place on earth where it is common for young men to court young women with a view to systematic larceny. In the past six months I have reported no less than a dozen cases, I think, of young men borrowing personal property from their sweethearts and bolting immediately to the pawnshop. The latest case of this kind which has commanded the attention of the New York police is a curiosity in crime. David W. Manwaring, jr., is the son of a rich merchant, and his father assures us that the young man had everything his heart could wish. "He was sent off every summer with a pocketful of money and told to enjoy himself," the old man declares. And yet David W. Manwaring, jr., is a common thief, and it seems that he has pilfered more from a love of the sport than on any other account. His social condition was secure, and he was on visiting terms with the most respectable families who had marriageable daughters.

Besides he was a member of a crack military company. Not to be a member of a crack military company in New York, if you are young and sound of body, is not to have reached the summit of social distinction. With all this prestige in his favor David has gone to the dogs. He stole diamond rings from his sweetheart, and he now confesses to having robbed a fellow-debauchee of $600 worth of personality during a single drunk. Manwaring, sr., has probably realized by this time that giving a young man yet in his teens a pocketful of money every summer with instructions to go away and enjoy himself is not the most wholesome treatment in the world. If he had given the boy a handful of grubbing-hoe every summer with an injunction to go out to a long Island farm and tickle the soil as a condition precedent to eating of the product thereof the boy would probably have become in time a useful member of society.

HEARST'S START IN LIFE.

Accident Made the Late Senator a Millionaire.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat.
"The late Senator Hearst once told me," said a man to a Globe-Democrat reporter, "he regarded his possession of an immense fortune nothing less than a miracle. I was forty-nine years old," he said, "when the row made over the discovery of the Comstock silver mines set the whole coast wild."

"I had been disappointed in the work I had been at and found myself pretty nearly broke. I had enough to buy a horse and the outfit, and started over the mountains from California with the boys. That broke me, and I wasn't feeling happy, because I'd worked and struggled and speculated a good many years, and it struck me as rather rough that a man of my age should have to start out, as I did then, like a young fellow. There were about ten or twelve of us in the party, and as I was blue, they let me alone rather, and my mustang being worn down, I stopped on the trail, put my arm through the bridle and picked out a rock to sit on."

"The rest of the boys rode on, but I sat there. There wasn't any reason why I should particularly, only I did. The whip I had was a willow switch I'd pulled from a tree as I rode along. As I sat there I switched the dust of the trail and thought, Shall I go with them or shall I go back? I switched and switched and thought and thought. I saw behind me all the hard work I'd done, all the chances I'd taken and lost on, and felt old and used up and no good. My sense told me to turn back and make my fight where I was known. There was safety in that, anyway."

"But I'd been camping night after night with the boys ahead of me, and it made me lonesome to think of parting company with them. So after switching and switching the dust on the trail, and feeling weak and human because I yielded, I mounted my horse again and rode on after the party."

"I got to the Comstock, and in six months I made half a million dollars. That is the foundation of what I've done since. Now why shouldn't I have turned back when I hesitated? It would have been sensible, 'conservative' to do that. But I didn't, and because I didn't I won. If you're ever inclined to think there's no such thing as luck just think of me."

Carrying Off Hotel Keys.

San Francisco Call.

"Did you ever stop to think of the number of keys that are carried away by hotel guests?" asked Cashier Wickes of the Grand yesterday. "It seems almost absurd, but we are compelled to have from ten to twenty new keys made every day. I presume the number will average fourteen. That represents a loss of more than 5,000 a year, which in itself is no inconsiderable item of expense. A few days ago a drummer occupied a room here, and when he had gone we found in his room a key belonging to a hotel in Kansas City that must have been carried off that distance. Attached to it was a thin slab of iron just fourteen inches long and nearly two inches in width, quite a load in itself for a man to carry around, and yet that drummer had lugged it about in his pocket for 2,500 miles, only to dump it at last in San Francisco."

On Fridays the Pennsylvania Railroad Company sell excursion tickets to Atlantic City, Cape May and Sea Isle City at rate of $5.00 for the round trip. The tickets can be used going only on the 11:00 A. M. train and are valid for return trip until the following Tuesday inclusive.
